Presidential Gunplay

Never, never, never will President Ford sign a bill for handgun registration. He wrote in Gun Week he wants to preserve "time-honored traditional freedoms" in America. They don't have them abroad. An angry wife in Tokyo, for example, might throw a plate at a husband, but a more efficient wife in New York would reach into the tea-cozy and drill him dead with a .44, root-a-toot-toot, reciting the Second Amendment to the Constitution as she did so, about the right to "keep and bear arms." She might be sorry afterward, of course. You can repair a plate, not a husband. But as Mr. Ford wrote to the National Rifle Association, he will defend freedoms "that we and our forefathers have enjoyed throughout our 200-year history."

Ford is against crime, too, of course. He promised the International Association of Chiefs of Police at Miami last month that, if elected, top priority in "the first 100 days" after Inauguration "will be the rallying of America behind federal anti-crime legislation." There's going to be a new "Council on Crime" that will lay out "a comprehensive five-year plan." Juvenile offenders, watch out. "Forty-five percent of all violent crimes," he told the Chiefs sternly, "is now perpetrated by juveniles."

The percentage of juvenile crime, oddly enough, is just about the same as the percentage of juvenile teen-agers out of work in the ghettoes, but Mr. Ford did not make the connection, any more than he did between America's astonishing crime rate and its astonishing number of handguns.

Massachusetts is going to vote on election day on "Question Five," the first state of the union to have a ballot referendum on an absolute ban on private ownership of all handguns. The whole country will watch. The National Rifle Association is up in arms. It is the most successful one-issue lobby in the country, with an annual budget over $10 million. Arrayed against it is the pygmy National Council to Control Handguns, with local affiliates, which hopes to put about $40,000 into the Massachusetts shootout. Backing it are members of the League of Women Voters, Council of Churches, B'nai B'rith and a surprising number of tough politicians and mixed with the do-gooders: both Massachusetts senators; the governor; and the Boston police commissioner. Oddly enough Michael Ford, while campaigning for his father in Boston said, let's ban handguns: "The interests of humanity take precedence over the interests of the gun lobby."

> "...'A person born in urban America today," Edward Kennedy told the Senate, stands a greater risk of being murdured that he would have faced in combat in World War II...."

Going back to Mrs. Maknamura, in Tokyo (who has just broken a plate on her husband, Hideo, you remember, in that domestic fracas) the funny thing is that she couldn't pull a gun on her man because of Douglas MacArthur. Yes, really. The rigid control on guns in Japan was imposed by the US army of occupation after World War II; no private Japanese can own a handgun, and hunting rifles require licenses and preliminary classroom instruction. The paradox is that Americans, who have the loosest regulation in the world at home, imposed the toughest on the Japanese. Only 171 crimes in Japan last year involved firearms. In the United States 25,000 people were killed by firearms.

"A person born in urban America today," Edward Kennedy told the Senate, "stands a greater risk of being murdered than he would have faced in combat in World War II."

Voters wavering between Ford and Carter in this strange election of 1976 might consider this subsidiary issue of gun control; Ford says he'll never ban them; Carter says sure he will, of course. In a form appeal for funds last February he had a sentence: "You and I will agree on some issues, disagree on others." He added, "I favor hand gun control."

Traveling through the bayous and beaches of Mississippi last month Ford seemed to labor at times to make the contrary point. Of wonderful outdoor recreation areas, he told them, "I congratulate you for it; you have fishing, hunting... And speaking of hunting," he broke in suddenly as the thought struck him, "I don't believe that the law-abiding citizens of this country should be deprived of the freedom to bear arms." He repeated it all day.

"Jimmy Carter, if elected President in November," warned a writer in Guns & Ammo, "would pursue a program of domestic disarmament as did his Democratic predecessors, Wilson, Roosevelt and Johnson." Domestic disarmament; it sounds bad, and the National Rifle Association is restless and jittery. Appealing for funds, it calls advocates of handgun control "a group of anti-Constitution fanatics...planning to

State-Record on censorship: no comment

Dr. Frank Harrison, one of eleven Democrats who "clean swept" the Richland County Council race in Tuesday's election, swept into the Osceola office during the voting with an axe to grind. Seems he tried to place a political ad in the State/Record newspaper that was critical, in part, of the State/Record Company and they wouldn't let him do it.

The ad which was entitled "Not Wanted — By Some Special Interest Groups" went on to say that the State/Record newspapers were a special interest group that would not want Harrison as a coouncilman because (it said) "as a councilman he will work for tax reform that would require them, as a large business, to pay their fair share of taxes." The State/Record Company is allowed, as a manufacturer, to be exempt from all property taxes "except taxes for school purposes" on improvements or additions to its plants for five years under section 65-1569 of the S. C. Code of Laws. The company requested and received exemption from levies of the "applicable millage" on $72,000 in additions for the year 1975.

Dr. Peter Becker, head of Public Survey Opinion Company, which placed ads for Dr. Harrison during his primary and general election campaigns, told us that he took the ad to the State/Record Co. on Oct. 28. He paid for it and submitted it to one of the "young girls" in the front office and left. Approximately 30 minutes after he got home, James Holton, ad director and general manager of the State/Record Co., called to say the newspaper could not accept the ad.

The reason Holton gave for not accepting the ad, Becker told Osceola, was that it is company policy not to accept ads that are critical of businesses and that the State/Record is a business and that the policy extended to it. Becker says he tried to explain that the ad only expressed an opinion of Dr. Harrison and that after about five minutes of dickering with Holton, he decided to accept the ad.

Holton later backtracked, telling Becker that he had checked with Arthur D. Cooper, associate publisher, who told him to reject the ad. Holton told Becker, by Becker's own account, that the "courts have held that a newspaper has the right to accept or reject anything and that there was nothing to compel them to take the ad."

Becker tried once more, unsuccessfully, to get the objectionable ad in the paper on the following day by asking if the ad could read "certain newspapers" instead of the State/Record, but that idea was rejected, too.

The ad, as it was finally run, left out the idea of newspapers as "special interests" altogether. The paper allowed reference to the Richland County Educational Association as a special interest, though, because, they said, the Association was a "public or semi-public body and that it was therefore okay to attack them."

Harrison and Becker were a bit piqued by what they considered an unfair practice of the State/Record Co. which prevented them from having that forum in which to present their criticism of the newspaper, especially in light of the fact that the State/Record ran all of the other ads that Harrison submitted. This included ads run during the primary and general election campaigns and, according to Becker, they spent about $4,000 during the general election alone.

Why the State/Record is so sensitive to criticism, no one knows for certain. When Osceola contacted Holton about the story he declined to comment on the matter. But things turned out well in the end. The State/Record Co. sold the ad anyway, Harrison got elected and all that's left is the principle of the thing. Could be, though, that Harrison might have some trouble getting "good press" out of the State/Record anytime in the near future — if they hold grudges that is.

Raiford scotches rumors

Robert Raiford of WCBD-TV in Charleston may well be the best TV news anchorman in the lowcountry and one of the best in the state. It probably comes as no surprise to viewers there when they see Raiford pulling something off at WCBD that they rarely see done on television at all.

For example, several weeks ago when former Secretary of Agriculture Earl Butz made his controversial racial slur, Raiford and WCBD decided that it was their "journalistic duty" to let their viewers in on just what it was that Butz said. Because FCC regulations prevented them from repeating, verbally, what was said (according to Raiford) they decided to print the quote on the television screen.

Although WCBD omitted the two most objectionable words in the quote (the slang words "pussy" and "shit"), they ran the quote with blank spaces where the objectionable words would have been. It certainly shouldn't be any big deal that WCBD took it upon themselves, at Raiford's suggestion, to do what even few of the newspapers in the state had the nerve to do, and what they did is further mitigated by the fact that they chose to do it on the late 11 p.m. news broadcast only. But it is also no secret, in this state at least, that television journalism is a wasteland of pretty faces and small minds; so much so, that any departure from the norm of the local news announcer is a welcome one. Thus the case for Robert Raiford.

What may have surprised viewers of WCBD (an ABC affiliate), however, was what happened back on Oct. 4. The station, taking advantage of the publicity afforded ABC-TV News' dynamic duo of Barbara Walters and Harry Reasoner, decided to offer their viewers a team of their own and scheduled their team to begin just 30 minutes prior to the ABC team's debut. Beginning on that day, Raiford was joined on the anchor desk by co-anchorperson Ellen Bryan, who before that time was known at the station only for her public service "Bryan's Bulletins".

Rumors quickly circulated that Raiford was disgruntled by the new look, an intrusion into what was before his exclusive territory. This, perhaps, was fired by the well-publicized fact that Reasoner was unhappy with the Walters addition, especially in light of the reports that speculated her salary at three or four times his own.

But Raiford denies that there is any unhappiness at all. According to Raiford, he was the one who thought up the idea. "I initiated it and argued for it," he said, "and I am very complimented by the fact that she is on the program. That's C-O-M-P-L-I-M-E-N-T-E-D," he added.

"She is a beautiful woman," he continued. "She has a lot on the ball and her talents were being wasted in her other role at the station." Raiford believes that Bryan is a natural for the news program. "Anything you can do to scotch the rumor that I am disgruntled would be greatly appreciated," Raiford said. "I don't know why people got the idea that I was unhappy just because Reasoner was unhappy with Walters."

Raiford doesn't deny that the station profited from the publicity given the new ABC team. "Hell, that was part of it, sure!" But, Raiford says, "We would have done it sooner or later even if ABC hadn't brought on Walters."

Stevens wins $50,000 suit

The bile which must have risen in the throat of Sen. James P. Stevens (D-Horry) following his defeat in the June primary by political unknown Ralph Ellis of Little River receded somewhat in September when he won a libel suit filed two years ago against the State-Record Company and its affiliate, Sun Publishing Co. of Myrtle Beach.

Stevens sued the State-Record for $50 million following the publication of a series of stories detailing Stevens' involvement in questionable real estate transactions on Sandy Island, located on the Waccamaw River in Georgetown County.

The suit was filed in July, 1974. On September 10, 1976 an Horry County jury awarded Stevens $50,000 in actual damages after it determined that material contained in a July 15, 1974 piece in the Myrtle Beach Sun News, and in a piece which appeared two days later in the Conway Field and Herald, was libelous. Both papers were then owned by the Sun Publishing Company, an affiliate of the Columbia State-Record Company.

In the original lawsuit, Stevens charged that the Sun-News stories, written by investigative reporter John Monk, denoted "that the plaintiff was opposed to certain tidelands legislation and ethics legislation because of his interest in Sandy Island Corporation, and the insinuation created and understood by persons reading the same denotes that the plaintiff is guilty of the crime of malfeasance or misfeasance of his public office."

One of the Sun-News stories included quotes from the Senator's former sister-in-law. The lawsuit alleged that these statements, made by the former wife of Tommy Stevens, carried "the connotation that the plaintiff James P. Stevens would do the bidding" of his brother, and thus "holds the plaintiff up to public ridicule and scorn."

It was apparently this second charge which carried the most weight with the Horry County jury.

Previous rulings by the South Carolina Supreme Court have generally supported the Sullivan v. New York Times decision in which the U. S. Supreme Court held that proof of libel against a public official, requires proof of intentional malice. Several experts familiar with the State-Record/Stevens case believe the case may be successfully appealed to the S. C. Supreme Court on the basis of the Sullivan decision and state supreme court decisions consistent with it.

Following the jury's decision, Bill Pope, attorney representing the State-Record Company and Sun Publishing, requested the jury's decision be set aside. Judge Wade Weatherford later denied that request. The newspaper chain is now appealing the decision to the state Supreme Court, and one company official has made the statement that the case would be appealed, if necessary, all the way to the U. S. Supreme Court.

In the meantime, Stevens is, at least temporarily, $50,000 richer. And in the wake of his recent defeat, the former state senator will have ample time to devote to fighting the appeals.

RICHLAND MALL OPEN EVENINGS

The POLITICAL ECONOMY by Ed Meadows

The evils of labor: 14B

Amongst the propaganda organs of the state's Establishment, labor unions are considered agents of Communism, Heathen Endeavor, and the Devil himself. No sin is considered too vile to have been committed by organized labor.

Yes, the state's daily newspapers and broadcast media have almost succeeded in equating a hatred of unions with patriotism and motherhood. South Carolina, they trust, doesn't need labor unions. It's workers are all docile, happy just to be working, happy to be risen up from dirt poverty into the ranks of the proletariat, eeking out a living between layoffs, breathing cotton dust and PCB particles down their lungs until by retirement time, they're chronically ill as well as chronically poor. All, of course, in service to orful corporate leaders and their wise handmaidens in the Statehouse.

And those South Carolinians unwitting enough to take their daily political instruction from the newspaper editorial pages must know by now that repeal of Section 14B of the Taft-Hartley Act would signal the Ultimate Doom. Then, according to the awful wisdom of South Carolina editorial writers, everyone would have to join a labor union or go without work.

They don't say just why, but these types also suggest that with the repeal of 14B, and the ascendency of labor unions in South Carolina, then no more firms would move their factories into the state. South Carolina's economy would die, and Communist labor officials would infiltrate the state's structure, spreading corruption, incest and filth in their wake. No more good, clean Christian fun.

Well, one fallacy at a time. First, the idea that repeal of section 14B would mean compulsory union membership is simply wrong. According to the South Carolina Labor Council, 14B prohibits labor and management from negotiating a union shop clause in their contracts. But if the amendment were repealed, no one would have to join a union to work in a union shop. (Some people, believe it or not, think section 14B is a "right-to-a-job" law mandating upon the state some commitment to full employment.)

"... The argument that unionization of South Carolina workers would make the state unattractive for new industry is patently absurd ..."

The second fallacy is that South Carolina's economy would suffer if its workers were unionized. Wrong again. The wages of South Carolina workers have been low for decades, much lower than the national average. For example, as of last July, the average hourly wage was $4.84 for the U. S. but only $3.81 for the state. That's more than 20 per cent less than the national average. Someone making $3.81 for a 40-hour workweek earns $7,620 a year before taxes. But measured in 1972 dollars, that annual salary comes to only $4,500 per year. In other words, the average wage of South Carolina would buy only $4,500 of goods or services in terms of 1972 dollars, not counting taxes.

Now suppose that over the next ten years labor unions became widespread through South Carolina. Then, yes, it would be true that the state would no longer be a happy hunting ground for corporations seeking the cheapest possible labor and the most docile work force. These firms might still be attracted to the state by its special tax loopholes (designed to seduce industries), but they would no longer be able to pay subsistence wages, not with strong labor unions present.

Yet consider this question: Must South Carolina continue to depend on its lack of qualities in order to attract industry? Need it lure corporations by such gimmicks as special tax breaks? No, and such tactics are hardly guarantees of attracting the better sort of companies to the state. More sophisticated firms will not wish to openly exploit any region of the nation. Their respect for good public relations overcomes their immediate greed. Instead, good, solid manufacturing companies make their moves for sound economic reasons. Does a state have a ready market, or a potential one, if the transportation costs of the product to be made is high? Or if transport cost is low and the firm already has a national market, it will concentrate on such considerations as whether a healthy, skilled, relatively intelligent work force is available to man its factories and whether climate, geography, recreational and cultural advantages of a region all combine to offer a tempting lifestyle for workers and executives.

A "full house" of Democrats

by Jim Walser

Well, John and David and Walter and Harry and Bah-bwa, it's still the wee hours of the morning after and we're stationed here at the Osceola "Trend Desk," frenetically trying to cipher out exactly what happened yesterday.

General election results are pouring in from all over South Carolina and Richland County, and a staff of emotionally spent workers is laboring under the deadline pressure of Wednesday morning to come up with some sort of quickie Vote Profile Analysis, like the good folk up at NBC and CBS are so famous for.

In the background, the computers, dozens of them, are whirring away, coughing up figures that tell of ward and precinct breakdowns, ethnic tendencies and historical patterns run amuck. And somewhere back there, a radio newsman is still mumbling about "impounded" voting machines and "record numbers of absentee ballots" that could give Gerald Ford (remember him?) New York State and another four years in the White House. Bizarre.

So like we say, it's still too early to make the kind of instant, categorical analyses that you fellows up at the "Anchor Desk" are so famous for, but we're gonna raise our eyebrows like David Brinkley, clear our throats and furrow our brows like the grand old man of CBS, Eric Severeid, and do a little speculatin' nonetheless.

And remember, don't quote us on any of this.

Richland County Council

Huh? What the hell happened here?

Those are the very words that probably came out of at least a couple of Republican voice boxes this morning. Twenty-two candidates were vying for the 11 vacant seats on Council, in a race that had all the intrigue and complications of the latest power struggle in Peking.

No Red Chinese were elected to Council, insofar as we've been able to determine, but three blacks and two women (both unprecedented developments) were. That could provide a kind of progressive political base on County Council that has never existed before. The blacks, John Harper, A. T. Butler and Julius Murray, as well as whites Candy Waites and Jim Barber can be described loosely as "liberals", at least as Council politicking goes.

That's because the story of Council since the Ice Age is one of extreme conservatism, whether one speaks of the old Democratic machine polticians who composed Council before 1972, or the GOP-dominated forum that emerged after the Nixon landslides of that year. Three of five members were Republicans after the 1972 debacle and another seat was gained in 1974. None of those Republicans will be confused politically with George McGovern.

With the expansion of Council to 13 seats this year, then, it appeared that Republicans would capture at least some of the seats, particularly with a holdover, ex-USC football coach Warren Giese, one time aspiring USC football coach Mooney Player and well-heeled youth candidate Bill Otis among those running.

Not so. Like so many local campaigns, the Republican effort was run in an archaic and disorganized manner and the candidates paid the price for that chaos. Giese ran twelfth, Player spent no time or money on the campaign, and Otis, who bought dozens of billboards and spent gobs of money on other outlets, showed only third among the GOP, 14th overall.

"We shut them out on Council," laughed one Demo bigwig at a victory party as the results came bounding in during the early evening Tuesday. "We shut the bastards out."

> "... The most resounding theme to come out of statewide elections in 1974 and '76 has been that of populism; the candidates that have spoken of their ethics, tax reform and overhaul of the Public Service and Dairy commissions have by and large won, many times in impressive fashion ..."

Many white Democrats benefited from widespread straight ticket voting in the black communities, after earlier concern that black voters were going to "single-shot" for only black Democrats Harper, Butler and Murray. But the single-shoting failed to materialize, and with Jimmy Carter's popularity in black wards helping, whites ran only slightly behind the three blacks in the black precincts, a development that eventually provided the margin of victory. In addition to Carter's pull, and the organized Democratic "team" approach, Republicans left themselves vunerable to charges of "racism" after resurrecting some allegations concerning Butler late in the campaign.

It was the kind of strategic blunder that symbolized Republican efforts in the county this year, leaving the party, weak, divided and leaderless in a place where Republicans are out-registered substantially by Democrats.

Burriss over House Judiciary chairman Bobby Kneece in District 78 — their party was losing another seat that had been considered solid. That was District 79 where Democrat Lloyd Hendricks upset two-term Representative Jewell Baskin.

Baskin was, of course, a conservative and she angered at least some of her constituents by her un-steadfast non-support of the Equal Rights Amendment. As was once said about someone else, she waffled, she wiggled, and she wavered on the subject. Hendricks, on the other hand, is considered a likely vote for the measure if it comes to the floor again in 1977 or '78.

Kneece probably suspected that he was in trouble. He lives in a heavily Republican district and was very nearly upset by Charlotte LeGrande there in 1974. Kneece has never been overly fond of the kind of door-to-door, person-to-person campaigning that is necessitated by single member House Districts.

In their endorsement of him, The State called Kneece "one of the three most influential members of the S. C. House" as chairman of the Judiciary Committee. He was also close to House Speaker Rex Carter, and was considered a possible successor to Carter should the Greenville Democrat choose a statewide option in 1978.

That, obviously, won't happen now.

Richland Senate

Nothing surprising here. Environmentalists were supporting Republican Bob Russell over incumbent John Martin, but not all that fervently. Russell was felt to be, by the eco-people, the lesser of evils, but Martin will apparently be afforded the opportunity to continue his anti-environment voting record for another term. In Seat Two, Isadore Lourie swamped heavy -spending Republican W. T. "Bill" Sanders. Sanders, a former member of the House, soaked the media with ads (as did Lourie) but never really articulated anything much against Lourie. "Can We Afford Lawyer-Legislators?" the Sanders ads asked. Apparently, we can.

Other Senate

District Eight Republicans were victimized by high-spending Democrats Tom Turnipseed and Bill Knotts — and by a strong showing by Carter in a traditional GOP stronghold.

Turnipseed and Knotts are decidedly more progressive than Albert Dooley and Mike Laughlin, the two Democrats - turned - Republicans that were defeated. Both Democrats talked about ethics, about Public Service Commission reform and about activism. And Knotts exploited Laughlin's lacklustre attendance record.

In Greenville, Republican Carroll Campbell defeated Democratic challenger Dan Yarborough. But in Spartanburg, David Turnipseed, Tom's brother, defeated Republican conservative Richard Hines.

Democrats also swept all Charleston Senate Seats. Conservative District Eight Republican Gilbert McMillan defeated the only black Senate candidate, Rodney Albert.

As a result of the Tuesday elections, the composition of the Senate has been altered by the addition of more populist voices in the two Turnipseeds and Knotts. Together with the already radical alterations that occured in the Senate in the Democratic primary elmination, the Senate will be an interesting body to watch in 1977.

The more Democratic, more progressive make-up will provide challenges for two individuals who had absolutely nothing — at least personally — on the line in Tuesday's elections.

For Lieutenant Governor Brantley Harvey, who sits as head of the Senate, the results of the primary and the general election challenge him to take a more aggressive role in the leadership of moderative - progressive forces in that body. Harvey, who has his eye on higher office, must increase his statewide presence and the number of populist measures that emanate from the Senate in the next year and a half could directly affect his chances to win the governorship in '78. The most resounding theme to come out of statewide elections in 1974 and '76 has been that of populism; the candidates that have spoken of ethics, tax reform and overhaul of the Public Service and Dairy commissions have by and large won, many times in impressive fashion.

For Governor Jim Edwards, the 1976 election could be the beginning of the end for his administration. His choice for President was rejected by voters of the state, a choice that Edwards campaigned for more enthusiastically than some expected him to do. Edwards' campaigning for Republcan Senate candidates around the state — what there was of it — was a dismal failure.

The Edwards administration, faced with more progressive sentiment in the Senate — a body he has gotten along with quite well in his first two years — could be forced into a position of totally relinquishing leadership of the state to that body.

As a minority administration in a state dominated by Democratic office-holders, the first two years of the Edwards governorship have accomplished little. The results of Tuesday's elections suggest that the final two years will be even less successful than those uninspiring beginnings.

Now, back to you John and David and Walter and Harry and Bah-bwa.

Meanwhile, in Congress...

by John Norton

November 3, a.m. —

In state Democratic circles this morning, the Wednesday morning quarterbacks are shaking heads and muttering into coffee cups over the results of a Congressional race which was virtually ignored by media "analysts" prior to Election Day. Early Tuesday, it appeared that the Congressional races of most interest would be the Fifth District matchup between Democratic incumbent Ken Holland and former Yankee superstar Bobby Richardson, plus the Sixth District mudsling between scandal-ridden incumbent John Jenrette and his mediocre opposition, former Republican Congressman Ed Young. But by 9 p.m. Tuesday evening, Democratic partygoers were opening conversations with the question, "Have you seen the figures on the Spence - Livingston race?"

No one was calling it a "race" when Orangeburg CPA Clyde Livingston lost a coin toss and ended up as the Demo ghost candidate opposite Spence on the ballot. Livingston's campaign could best be described as "non-existent." Yet the final results this morning, when compared with other Congressional races where incumbents had been counted as shoo-ins, show that Spence would have been in serious trouble if a significant Democratic effort had been mounted.

The figures break down like this: in the First Congressional District, Democratic incumbent Mendel Davis, who had active if not strong Republican opposition, took 69 percent of the vote. In the Fourth District, James Mann defeated active opponent Robert Watkins hands down, taking about 73 percent of the vote. But Spence, even with Livingston sitting on his hands, was able to muster only 58 percent of the vote.

In Spence's Second District, Carter received about 76,000 votes to Ford's 60,000. Spence took 76,000 to Livingston's 58,000. In other words, there were roughly 11,000 less votes cast in the Congressional race, most of which appear to have been Democrats unfamiliar with Livingston who chose not to vote for any candidate. So it breaks down this way: with the Carter pull in the Second District, a number of Democrats — Earle Morris, for example — would have been assured of about 69,000 votes to Spence's 76,000. With the right campaign organization, party hindsighters say, a strong Democrat could have turned the trick.

Politics

Spence was thought by some political observers to be weak this year; in the 1974 contest, former civil rights activist and black attorney Matthew Perry ran Spence a close race, in what many concede is the state's most Republican - leaning congressional district. Among those Democrats who seriously considered running against Spence this year, the most formidable was Columbia attorney Alex Sanders, a former House member, candidate for lieutenant governor in 1974, and now a senator-elect from District Seven, Seat One. Sanders backed out of the race at the last minute after the big Democratic money in Richland County refused to support him, describing his record as "too liberal" for their tastes.

"Sanders had enough political intelligence to see that Spence was beatable," one Democratic source told Osceola. "He had a poll showing he could beat Spence, for one thing; also, he had outpulled Spence in the Second District when he ran for lieutenant governor in 1974. Everybody was saying in '74 that anybody but Perry could have beaten Floyd. The fact is that Alex wasn't willing to take Floyd on without traditional party backing, so he opted for a state senate race in which he was virtually assured of victory. He's not a hard campaigner; his idea of a political race is no opposition in the primary and no opposition in the general election."

The source added that a review of past elections shows that Spence facing any Democrat will poll no more than 55-60 percent. "With Sander's recognition factor and established political organization, he could have pulled almost all of the needed six to ten percent away from Spence in Richland County alone," the source said. "Spence is weak; Sanders could have spent substantially less and beat him. The issues were there. He had everything going for him but the uncertainty about how well Carter would do in South Carolina; if he had gambled on that — and it was a good gamble — he wouldn't be eating his heart out this morning."

The Sixth Congressional District — In the Sixth Congressional District, incumbent Democrat John Jenrette proved that mountains of scandal can be overcome, at least in a race against Republican opponent Ed Young, who had served in Congress for two years and then been rejected by the voters for a second term in 1974. Jenrette, who overcame among other things a Charlotte Observer investigative report detailing his questionable real estate dealings in North Myrtle Beach, is now considered secure in his Congressional seat — in recent years, 95 percent of those Congressmen reelected for a second term have been allowed to serve until they tired or died.

Both Jenrette and Young mounted expensive campaigns, funded in part by national interests on both sides of the political spectrum who perceived the race as close and crucial. As it turned out, it wasn't all that close — Jenrette polled 74,563 to Young's 58,457 and carried all but Young's home county of Florence. Why did Jenrette do so well, in the face of substantial attacks on his integrity? We can only speculate: he had a highly organized campaign, run by Marvin Chernoff, who mounted the 1974 gubernatorial campaign of Pug Ravenel. (Chernoff, by the way, reportedly made a statement recently that Jenrette was not the most scrupulous candidate he had worked for.) More importantly, Jimmy Carter did very well in the Sixth District, taking 60 percent of the popular vote and taking 4,000 more votes in the District than Jenrette. Jenrette, therefore, definitely benefitted from the Carter coattail. (Young outpolled Ford 58,457 to 51,970.) Finally, Young's willingness to get down in the mud and take a personal role in the Jenrette smear may have cost him votes.

Every conceivable Jenrette faux pass — tax problems, marital problems, business problems, special interest money — was hawked to the voters by Young in strongly - worded statements and mud-slinging television advertisements. The demand for a grand jury investigation into Jenrette's real estate dealings by U. S. District Attorney Mark Buyck, Young's 1974 campaign chairman, may have been the Young campaign volley which convinced voters that Jenrette was being persecuted; martyrdom, rightly or wrongly perceived, tends to produce votes.

A long night for the GOP — Photos by Venson Steadman

The Fifth Congressional District — This one was a squeaker. Political newcomer Bobby Richardson with his All-American image and high name recognition factor was expected to give Holland a very close run, and he did. Final totals gave Holland 51.8 percent of the vote. Richardson ran the better campaign, funded by national GOP financiers who believed that the Holland - Richardson race provided one of the GOP's best shots at picking up a Congressional seat. Richardson and his campaign staff played his Christian nice-guyness and impressive record with the championship New York Yankees for all it was worth — television ads alternated between scenes of Richardson being nice to animals and children and fuzzy film of Richardson's grand slammer in the 1960 World Series.

Holland was handicapped by a messy divorce situation, a problem he shared with the Sixth District's Jenrette. However, there the similarity ended. Jenrette had an extremely well-organized campaign, where Holland's was lackluster at best. Also, Richardson was a much more attractive candidate than Ed Young, whose voting record (e.g., against Social Security increases) during his one term was a millstone the former second sacker didn't have to contend with.

A source familiar with Richardson's campaign told us that "Richardson had a very sophisticated campaign apparatus for first-timer. The national Republican party pumped a lot of talent and money into the Richardson race." The Carter coattail effect definitely helped Holland in achieving his narrow victory. Carter carried every county in the Fifth District. Holland lost traditionally Democratic York County, which has a sizeable labor vote, by 400 votes while Carter beat Ford there by more than 3,000. Holland lost his home county of Kershaw by about 1500 votes out of 13,000; Carter carried the county by about 100 votes. Holland's main strength lay in the rural counties of Chesterfield, Cherokee and Fairfield — he won about two-to-one in each. Everywhere else it was very close. Holland has Carter to thank for this one. ■

TWO DESPERATE MEN...

Two members of the Osceola staff have been searching unsuccessfully for a home for several weeks. We're not rich, but we're not beggars either. We are willing to pay a reasonable price for a one or two bedroom furnished apartment somewhere near downtown. Alas, 'landlord fever'--apparently a mutant strain of swine flu--has infected Rentdom. The symptoms are easily detectable: watch for a combination of slum dwelling, large deposit and ridiculously-high rent--two months in advance.

Can anyone help us? Is anyone immune? We will pay a finders fee; Insta-Rent need not apply. Call John or Brad at Osceola, 254-5507.

The lost years

Authors Medved and Wallechinski

"What Really Happened to the Class of '65?" by Michael Medved and David Wallechinski, Random House, 1976, 285 pages.

How often have we looked back on our high school days and remembered, in flashes of recaptured time, the four incredibly short years that swept up our adolescence in the cross currents of experiences and changes that are now forever lost to us? For many of us there is a profound feeling of loss and the recognition that youth is terribly fleeting and impermanent. The swift transition to college, job, career and family strips us of the last threads of innocence and naivete' before we confront the roles and choices which society forces upon us and which we can either challenge, deny or accept.

Michael Medved and David Wallechinski were two members of the graduating class of 1965 at Palisades High School in suburban Los Angeles, not a typical high school by any standards. It's students were the products of southern California affluence — the potentially rebellious new vanguard of a generation which a few years hence would turn the campuses of America upside down, and would lead the youth of the '60's from the Beach Boys to the Grateful Dead and leave in its wake the social foment of a transitory counterculture.

Medved and Wallechinski began their remarkable book with this premise in mind and the fact that Time magazine had chosen their class for a feature portrait of American youth in 1965. They determined to find out what had happened to their classmates in the ten years since graduation. To what extent had they survived the enormous expectations thrust upon them as they went out into the world? The authors note at the beginning, "... we were part of the healthiest, most beautiful, best educated and affluent generation in the history of the world. We were, in fact, the natural leaders of that generation. Never mind Time's dark hints about drinking, sexual promiscuity and unbridled hedonism in the Palisades senior class. We were the children of destiny and we would make our way through dangerous and uncharted seas." Some of the Class of '65, however, didn't fare too well in the aftermath of graduation and underwent startling transformations in the decade that followed.

The result of tracing down former friends and acquaintances is a fascinating document comprised of interviews with 30 alumni of the Class of '65.

The interviews are intriguing but overall they're interesting more for the extremes portrayed than for any sense of predictabilitmalcy in the major characters depicted. And this, of course, is what makes for good non-fiction reading. A southern California high school is, after all, ripe for the plucking and the reader is stupefied by each bizarre tale of overindulged whims, sexual misadventures, drug culture odysseys and general revolt against upper middle class bondage. Let's face it, the mystique of "Hollywood Babylon," Beverly Hills, chic neuroticism and a gloriously decadent and permissive lifestyle has had its impact on the Palisades Class of '65. The youth of this culture are just a little bit messed-up as well as bright, ambitious, malcontent and yes, even "normal" like other students elsewhere. But the "lunatic fringe" stands out and even those students who led "quiet lives of desperation" have highly entertaining stories to tell. There definitely were some happy endings at the conclusion of all the confusion and searching, trying new colleges, job hopping and "dropping out." But again, the off-beat students really stand out.

For instance, there is the arch-cynical "idealist" and precocious class intellectual who after reading Sartre's "Nausea" embraced existentialism and then emerged from high school to become a fanatical devotee of Mahareshi Yogi, an instructor of Scientology and finally a disciple of Ayn Rand and a consumate John Bircher right-wing ideaologue. He claims, ironically, to be a passionate romanticist who finally became convinced that rational self-interest, extreme individualism and free enterprise were the only worthwhile goals of philosophy. This is quite a bizarre path to self-discovery.

And then there's the fate of the "All American Boy," the star quarterback, and the senior voted "most likely to succeed." He becomes a minister in the Movement of Spiritual Awareness and is preoccupied with getting in touch with the "Mystical Traveler Consciousness." Also, there's the class outcast who, true to form, never really finds himself and ends up merging his life with that of natives on a Pacific island in American Samoa.

Almost equally interesting about this book is the catalogue of recognizable people from everyone's high school days. Included are the "bad girl," the anonymous, quiet type, the goof-off, the debater, the homecoming queen, and the practical joker. There are also recollections by the school "tough guy", the sensitive girl who wrote poetry for the literary anthology, the actor, and the slick, cool leader who had that definite presence about him of knowing what he wanted and how to get it.

From the class intellectual, this observation, "One of the most incredible inhumanities I can conceive of is gym class." From the class idol, "If you think you're really not much inside, then you've got to prove to the world that you are." And this from the most reserved member of the class who is now involved with Hare Krishna, "'Leave It to Beaver' and Ozzie and Harriet' were my favorite shows."

"What Really Happened to the Class of '65?" is a work that approaches the class of Studs Terkel's "Working" as a slice of social realism. Although one is left with the unfulfilled feeling that all this has taken place way out in California, the students who went through the Vietnam war years and largely avoided that catastrophe; the youth culture; and the experiences of that time will largely be recognizable to those who grew up in the '60's and '70's and who went to high school and college during that turbulent period.

Theatre

To be successful, a dinner theatre must achieve three fundamental goals: have a pleasant atmosphere, good food, and a quality theatrical performance.

In its current production of Relatively Speaking, Hiers Dinner Theatre went to a considerable effort to create that kind of relaxed atmosphere — and it succeeded on all counts.

The evening was capped, though, by a superb performance of "Relatively Speaking", a minor British comedy by Alan Ayckbourn. This three-act comedy was one of the best non-professional productions I have ever seen. There is little topical British humor to confuse the audience, just outrageously funny one-liners and a hilarious series of misconceptions. To divulge the plot would spoil the play, but the cast consists of Chip Latimer as Gregg, a young British office worker; Amanda Graham as Ginny, his girlfriend; Adrian Elder as Philip, one of the landed gentry; and Ruth Gottlied Moore as Sheila, his wife. The cast all mastered the most difficult of stage accents and all showed fine timing and delivery.

Special mention should go to Moore for a splendidly underplayed performance. The subtlety of her actions contrasted perfectly with the tremendous energy always generated by Elder.

The direction, also by Elder, was crisp and effective, especially in the fast pacing of the first act, normally the most difficult part of all short plays.

The arena setting of the stage may have caused some viewing problems for those seated at the outer tables, but the general reaction of the audience showed that the comedy was not hampered.

The production will run on weekends only through November 13, with dinner at 7 p.m. and curtain at 8:30. The price for a ticket is $10, and no better money could be spent for entertainment in the city.

Political Economy

In perspective, the argument that unionization of South Carolina workers would make the state unattractive and hence unfit for new industry is patently absurd. Heavy unionization of the North and West and Midwest has not prevented these regions of the nation from fomenting industry. In fact, these regions have industrial bases which are the most substantial in the world. And they have strong unions.

But we must understand the role of labor unions. Recognize first the commonplace, well-documented fact that by far the most prevalent structure of American industry is that of oligopoly. Oligopoly means monopoly shared by several firms. Examples range from the "Big Four" auto makers to the handful of companies that dominate every industry from cigarettes to hair spray. Now these firms have monopoly power, both with regard to the products they sell and the resources they buy, resources such as labor.

Labor unions are formed to counteract, to "countervail," in the words of economist John K. Galbraith, the power of the typical oligopoly. Without such a countervailing force, oligopoly firms would have their way all the time, and workers would be at their complete mercy and whim, as is the case in this state. So given the size and power and influence of the large oligopoly firms which operate most factories, labor unions represent a counterweight, a quantum of monopoly power called into being to represent the workers across the table from the oligopolists, hopefully to cancel out their powers to abuse employees. In the absence of the power of a strong union, oligopolies' abilities to abuse them is large. And one can hear outlandish stories of the old days, when unions were nonexistent. Back then, for instance, it's said that Henry Ford gave his workers only one chance per day to use the restroom. And when they did, Ford had a supervisor accompany each worker into the stall and investigate to make absolutely sure that the worker had in fact gone to the bathroom. It's said that Ford himself used to check the toilets.

Still, organized labor, and repeal of 14B are dirty words in South Carolina. For most of the state's populace has been so lied to by the state's media, so propagandized, that the interest of working people have been disguised and the interests of greedy corporate management have been equated with high patriotism and virtue. And the worker is the loser here.

invade our children's schools and churches, civic clubs and union halls with their unfair, half-truths about guns and gun ownership."

Dogs, bicycles and automobiles, you see, should be licensed, but firearms not. President Ford makes it all plain: "If you want to go hunting," he told the folks in the Deep South recreation area, "you shouldn't have to go down and register your firearms with some federal officials." See?—it's that damn bureaucracy again.

Remember how Richard Nixon in 1968 was going to name a new law-and-order attorney general (John Mitchell); end permissiveness in the courts; and curb crime? Well, since then the rate of violent crime is up 60 percent.

This should not be approached in any light spirit. Growing crime in America is a symbol of democratic failure; the rate still rises; the best Mr. Ford could tell the Chiefs was that things are getting worse slower. Growing crime encourages all the forces of authoritarianism in a country—of harshness, discipline, fear and prejudice. The Nixon catchword was "law-and-order"; the Ford phrase is milder, "restore domestic tranquility." He is not the demagogue Nixon was. He told the Chiefs happily that he had cut the rate of increase of violent crime "to nine percent." That would shock us if it were dollar inflation. Meanwhile, the ineffective Law Enforcement Assistance Administration (LEAA) has spent 5.2 billion since its inception but little of it goes to clearing the ghastly jam of lower courts, and much of it goes to police and prosecutors and prowl cars, to rake in more offenders, juvenile and all. They add to the congestion and are freed by plea-bargaining. "You can't solve problems by throwing money at them," says Ford easily. He promises a "rallying of America" against crime. Goody; we can all break out our WIN buttons again—Whip Illegality Now.

CINEMA

CAROLINA THEATRE, 1323 Main Street, 252-8011

A lady lawyer is "Bad, Black and Beautiful" in this dismal looking R-rated number. 1:40, 3:30, 5:20, 7:10, and 9, with the two matinees dropping during the week.

COLUMBIA EAST I THEATRE, 7369 Garner's Ferry Road, 776-0350

"Bittersweet Love." The tearjerker starring Meredith Baxter Birney crosses town. PG. 1, 3, 5, 7, and 9: the matinees will not be shown during the week.

COLUMBIA EAST II THEATRE, 7369 Garner's Ferry Road, 776-0350

"Obsession." It's director Brian DePalma who's obsessed in this movie — his idea fix being to recreate the work of Alfred Hitchcock (specifically "Vertigo") with himself in the Hitch role. This story of a land developer (Cliff Robertson) who tries to revive his dead wife (Genevieve Bujold) in somebody else (Genevieve Bujold) is nicely photographed by Vilmos Zsigmond and deftly directed at spots, but it's too derivative to be interesting and the whole effect including the lush music by Bernard Herrmann, is to give the viewer the same sort of deja vu that Robertson had in the movie. The incestuous origins may have something to do with Robertson's strange, crabby performance, although Buj k, typically, does a good job. With Robert Lithgow, PG. 5:20, 7:20, and 9:20 with an additional 3:20 show on the weekend.

DUTCH SQUARE NORTH THEATRE, Dutch Square Mall, 798-1110

"Burnt Offerings." New haunted house thriller starring Burgess Meredith, Karen Black, Bette Davis, and Oliver Reed. 3, 5, 7:05, and 9:50; no 3 o'clock show during the week.

DUTCH SQUARE SOUTH THEATRE, Dutch Square Mall, 798-1110

"The Gnomemobile" continues. It's earlier Disney business starring Walter Brennan and Keenan Wynn. 1:30, 3:15, 5, 6:45, and 8:30.

FOX THEATRE, 1607 Main Street, 254-5212

"Student Body." It's rated R. 1:40, 3:30, 5:20, 7:10, and 9. with the afternoon shows dropping during the week.

GAMECOCK I THEATRE, Parkland Plaza Shopping Center, 796-0022.

"The Ritz." The Broadway comedy about the goings on at a gay steam bath becomes a movie with Jack Weston and Rita Moreno. 1:15, 3:15, 5:15, 7:15, and 9:15.

GAMECOCK II THEATRE, Parkland Plaza Shopping Center, 796-0022

"Dark Victory," the Bette Davis-with-an-incurable-disease schmaltzer ends on Friday, the 5th, with James Cagney in "White Heat" starting Saturday. The latter is not such a great movie (partly because of Raoul Walsh's characteristically overstated and sentimental direction) but has a startling performance by Cagney as the crazed, mother-dominated criminal. Both are at 1, 3, 5, 7, and 9 with no maintees during the week.

JEFFERSON SQUARE THEATRE, Jefferson Square, Downtown, 254-6731

"Outlaw Josey Wales." Clint Eastwood fans can take in yet another dose of this Eastwood latest about a former Confederate who leads a band of homeless victims on a vendetta. Reportedly a cut above his usual standard. 4:45, 7:10, and 9:30. There is also a 2:20 show on the weekend.

MIRACLE THEATRE, 1228 Main Street, 256-1950

"Marathon Man." This Robert Evans - John Schlesinger has all the usual elements of current suspense movies — violence, chases, a victimized hereo — but it takes itself entirely too seriously; there's no suggestion of anyone having fun making this nonsense up and so the sudden, graphic, and almost casual violence becomes revoltingly affectless, the performances, by Roy Scheider, Marthe Keller, William Devane, and Laurence Olivier, cold and lifeless. Practically the only traces of personality in the movie are supplied by Dustin Hoffman and writer William Goldman, both of whom are merely repeating their all too familiar methods. The plot is about a grad student (Hoffman) pusued and tortured by an ex-Nazi (Olivier) and his band. 2:15, 4:45, 7:15 and 9:45. PG.

PALMETTO THEATRE, 1417 Main Street, 254-5800

"Norman, Is That You?" If you like Redd Fox, Pearl Bailey and lots of gay jokes then it could be your kind of picture — about two parents who visit their son in L. A. and find that he's changed preferences. 3, 5, 7, and 9 with no matinees during the week.

PLAZA III THEATRE, 1223 Main Street, 254-7960

"Car Wash." Black musical set in a car wash with sketches and lots of characters. Richard Pryor, George Carlin, Professor Irwin Corey, Garrett Morris. PG. 1, 3, 5, 7, and 9 — the two early shows for the weekend only.

Dustin Hoffman in "Marathon Man"

RICHLAND MALL I THEATRE, Richland Mall, 782-2228

"Dog Day Afternoon." On a hot August afternoon a homosexual bankrobber (Al Pacino) sticks up a Brooklyn bank in order to pay for his lover's sex change operation. He and his partner (John Cazale) foul up, and the police stakeout that follows becomes a hilarious form of street theatre for Pacino to vent his spleen to the TV cameras and the world. The plot seems to say "only in New York," and director Sidney Lumet had tried to make this the ultimate New York movie, but he only partially succeeds; the slapdash treatment is certainly entertaining, but it seems ultimately superficial. Still a fine performance by Pacino, and good support from Cazale, Charles Durning, and Carol Kane. R. Call about the time.

RICHLAND MALL II THEATRE, Richland Mall, 782-2228

"Shout at the Devil." The corporate thinkers at American International seem to have crossed "King Solomon's Mines" with "The African Queen" for an adventure movie billed, not surprisingly, as the most spectacular ever. With Roger Moore and Barbara Parkins in the cast, don't expect such spectacular performances, although Lee Marvin and Ian Holm are also on hand. It's about sabateurs fighting the Germans during World War I.
